Jay Carow has been a registered architect and design principal in architectural and planning firms for more than fifty years. He holds professional architectural degrees from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, M. Arch., and the Illinois Institute of Technology, B. Arch.

He has programmed and taught university courses in architecture and building technology for twelve years. His highest academic ranking was as full professor and founding dean of a university's degree-granting programs in architecture, planning and building technology.

Carow has been a partner in architectural firms as the design architect since 1969 and has served as an expert witness since 1985. His expert witness services include cases involving slip, trip and fall accidents, and all areas of architectural design and construction and non-compliance with safety codes and standards. His design work is based on his understanding of energy and environmental savings.

Carow researches cases, develops opinions, appears at depositions and presents his opinions at court appearances. With his years of professional and academic experience he brings credibility to his testimony, and an ability to describe technical issues clearly and convincingly. His services have been provided on cases in Connecticut, Indiana Illinois, Massachusetts and New Jersey; states where he has architectural registrations.
